

gaspard monge was a men's chaussure poignant, spit-shined, his head resting at the heel of things algebraic visions danced revolutionary in the light of his silver buckle shattering the traction of decades underfoot on his brow loose tendrils fashioned after napoleon (although he was uptight) at dusk four corners of a secret converge an X weighted by an egyptian coin what does it mean to image this fortress these fleets this feud? with radar with GPS with night vision with drones with silly puddy but maybe that's a stretch with his was called géométrie descriptive:

plotted and planar projections all sides of an object splayed (some god's vision) true and multiple views of a thing foretells-itself-in-the-round to press through this flatness, to be thrown into theater military leverage trembles across this latent image a new fortification erected by sure thumbs with the exactitude of a pentagon clicks in place the oncoming stampede rattles the skinny tin of his eyes watching the hordes crash into oblique angles then fall like silk the chaussure pleased, pivots on that gossip up-turned collars shape this house of pop desire
